Writers Interacting Effectively with Readers in Academic Writing Carol Rinnert, Professor Emeritus, Hiroshima City University Taking the perspective of writing as a social act (Hyland, 2015), researchers have found that professional writers are able to interact with their readers in effective ways that many L2 writers find challenging. Based on findings from analysis of English and Japanese essays written by multilingual writers with different backgrounds, I will share suggestions for intermediate and advanced writers to improve their use of interactional metadiscourse, including hedges, boosters, and reader-engagement devices, such as inclusive 'we' and questions. The presentation will include guided analysis of student texts and audience discussion on how to teach such metadiscourse.
